Known as "Queen Dr. Mommy" to many, Dr. Chappelle Washington-Freer is an entrepreneur, a youth advocate, an educator, and a mother by nature. She has dedicated her life to youth empowerment and diversity education utilizing an anti-deficit approach. She upholds a personal mission to uplift urban communities mentally and emotionally by cultivating safe spaces of empowerment through education, self-awareness, and leadership. Education has been a huge outlet in her life. Chappelle has obtained a B.S. in Management from Lincoln University (PA), an M.B.A. in International Business from the American College of Dublin (Ireland), and more recently, a Doctorate in Education from Cabrini University.

Dr. Chappelle is a published author of one children's book, "Hi, my name is ISO" and has committed her "scholarly research to the success of black male students. "Chappelle continues to volunteer, partner, and consult with both local and national churches, community organizations, and school systems. She will remain a lifelong learner and educator to all those she encounters.
